

Diversity in the media and arts

This strand recognizes the invaluable and unique role that diverse media and arts play in intercultural education and cultivating respect, diversity and social justice throughout society. Consequences of discrimination and, more generally, of mutual prejudices spread by media and other networks will be explored and discussed. Presentations are expected to focus on how diversity in media and the arts influences intercultural interaction, education and society, in both theoretical and practical terms. Proposals may present innovative approaches already in practice, such as media and digital literacy, visual learning, and digital identities. Research projects or theoretical approaches from any area of media or the arts are also possible.
